In December, a California priest revealed that his high school athletic trainer had molested him while coaching youth sports. The priest reported his abuse to the police but has been left waiting for a response. Now, he's sued the Catholic school district where the abuse occurred. The priest, identified as John Doe, said in a lawsuit filed Tuesday that the priest molested him after the teenager and his mother enrolled at a Franciscan school. The boy, now 31, had started playing basketball at age 7 and continued in the sport until he was 16, the lawsuit said. According to the lawsuit, in August 2009, Doe played in a basketball tournament at St. Francis High School in Mountain View, Calif. It was there, the lawsuit alleges, that the priest, "for no apparent reason," grabbed Doe's buttocks, exposed himself and masturbated while laughing. Doe was the only boy playing in the tournament and he was assigned to a player-coach, who himself had been a basketball player at the school. The priest left the school in 2010, the suit said, and the coach also left the school in 2011. The teacher in charge of youth athletics was fired, but the coach and the priest remain employed by the school district. The lawsuit alleges that the priest and the coach were aware of the molestation “but failed to report it to law enforcement or notify the victim.” The priest’s 82157476af
